Reimagining South Asia: Multilateralism in the Post COVID World

‘South Asia’ is one of the modern conceptions of regional identity. The emergence of regional identity has significance underpinnings to the successive growth from mere bilateral to multilateral engagements among neighbouring countries. As various scholars are predicting and speculating a new shift in world affairs in the post COVID-19 period, the significance of multilateralism would remain intact. Various challenges to the security and strategic complex of South Asia are evident at local, regional, and global level, most of the challenges cannot be dealt singlehandedly. Highlighted multilateralism as an important policy at the regional and global levels demand a very robust, yet flexible policy orientation from the members of the region.
